Adopt-A-Spot (not the kind you are thinking)

While we support adopting dogs, even ones named "Spot", the German Shepherd Rescue of the Rockies has discovered a GREAT OPPORTUNITY to get much needed FREE Advertising.....But we need YOUR HELP!

Adopt-A-Spot is a Denver Community program through the Keep Denver Beautiful affiliate of Keep America Beautiful, in which citizens and organizations can volunteer to maintain a particular area of Denver by picking up litter, and if necessary, removing graffiti and illegal signs for a 12 month period. Keep Denver Beautiful offers safety and procedures training and clean up supplies for a minimum of 4 scheduled clean ups per year that are scheduled by the Spot Adopter.

Here's where YOU come in! By agreeing to participate in this wonderful opportunity to keep a corner of our world beautiful, the GSROR will get RECOGNITION WITH A CITY ISSUED SIGN that will be visible to MANY!

WHAT: Denver's Adopt-A-Spot Program

WHERE: Numerous locations are available right now. Visit www.denvergov.org and search for Adopt-A-Spot to see what part of the city would you like to sign up for, then...

WHEN: Please contact me immediately, so we can reserve the spot that is convenient to you AND get our GSROR signs up in the community, NOW.

Add to the fun by inviting your family and friends to join you in supporting a great cause and helping to keep our world a beautiful place!

Thanks for getting involved! I am already planning to Adopt-A-Spot on 44th Ave. from Pecos to Zuni for GSROR! I look forward to hearing from you!

Simplify, Simplify, Simplify

Before you teach your dog anything from “lie down” to “fetch me a cold one from the fridge,” I’ll let you in on a little secret dog trainers use to be successful...they break down the desired behavior or chain of behaviors into pieces, rather than trying to teach the whole. In other words, they SIMPLIFY the activity for the dog.

Lie Down. For instance, let’s take the basic idea of teaching “lie down.” Whether the luring, capturing, or shaping method (see Oct. 2011 Tracey’s Training Tips for definitions) is used, the act of lying down can be broken up into parts which can be taught separately. First, a trainer might teach a dog to “sit.” Then, the trainer might teach the dog to bend his head down towards the ground. Finally, the trainer might teach the dog to slide his front paws forward until he is in a “down” position. The particular steps don’t matter so much, as long as each step along the way is understood by the dog and the end result is the desired behavior.

A Cold One. Now, let’s take the more complicated idea of teaching “fetch me a cold one from the fridge.” Again, various training methods can be used; however, only one element is taught at a time to simplify the activity.

Basically, the activity is broken up into the following parts: person signals the dog (any kind of cue will do, like a word or a hand gesture), dog walks into appropriate room (the kitchen), dog approaches the fridge, dog grabs the handle of the fridge, dog pulls on the door, dog reaches head into the fridge, dog recognizes appropriate item (a cold one), dog grabs the item with his mouth, dog backs out of the fridge, dog closes the door, dog exits the room, dog returns to the person, dog relinquishes the cold one to the person. Whew! There are a lot of parts to that trick! But by teaching each part individually to the dog and then starting to link the parts together (chaining), eventually, the dog will be able to do the entire trick in one shot.

For behaviors or tricks as complicated as that one, most trainers will prefer to teach the final part first and work their way backwards (back chaining). The reason for this is so the dog will remember the last parts well from doing them so many times and will remember the first parts well because they were taught most recently. (Might sound complicated, but it works.)

Why would a trainer simplify behaviors?

1. How would you prefer to learn a poem? One line at a time or the entire thing in one reading? Exactly. One line or one part at a time is much easier.
2. If the parts are easier to learn than the whole, then the dog is much more successful at learning AND the trainer is much less frustrated.
3. When a dog is successful and the trainer is not frustrated, both are eager to continue the process of learning, making the entire experience much more pleasant.

Practice. Sometimes, it can be challenging to determine all the parts that make up a behavior or trick. But with practice, you will get better at seeing the parts and knowing the best way to teach them to your dog. Then, before you know it, you’ve got a dog doing exactly what you taught him to do and your family and friends will be amazed!

Remember. Have fun with it! Dog’s love learning new things and they are excited by the things they DO know!

GOOD TIMES!

Find Me A Home PLEASE

Who does not shed a tear when they see a shelter pet, staring at back at them with those big eyes that you know are saying “take me home, please, please, please take me home. I’ll be good I promise!” Not enough of us, that’s for sure. But for those of us who do, we know that we can’t take every pet home, unless of course we have a 40 acre ranch with unlimited income to feed and care for all those needy paws. This is where Shelter Me Photography (SMP) enters the picture with a mission to change the way people see shelter pets by professionally photographing and promoting them in coordination with caregiver communities, and by teaching shelter-photography workshops to shelter and rescue workers nationwide.

Capturing those “big eyes” and a whole lot of love in a single image isn’t easy, but after photographing over 8,500 homeless animals in over 50 shelters across 11 states, SMP’s director and co-founder, Nanette Martin, has mastered the task. As the country’s most experienced shelter photographer, Nanette’s images have increased adoption rates – some as high as 100%; facilitated the adoption of special-needs/hard-to-place shelter residents into forever homes; and caused the removal of numerous dogs from death row after their pictures revealed the true spirit of their nature.

Nanette and SMP are proud to partner with shelters, rescues and foster organizations anywhere in the country, especially the German Shepherd Rescue of the Rockies (GSROR). Nanette is particularly sensitive to the plight of large breed dogs that enter our nation’s shelter system and turns to groups like GSROR when she encounters one in need of immediate attention.

You may be thinking “oh my gosh, how does SMP pull this off all over the country?” The answer to that is, it takes a village! SMP relies on the support of sponsors like Purina One and individual supporters like

YOU. While it is critically important that you support your local shelter or rescue, consider this . . . when you donate $20 to SMP, you cover the cost of what it takes to photograph one animal, giving that animal the best advertising possible to find a loving, forever home. Not only does the animal win, the shelter brings in an adoption fee and space opens up for another pet that otherwise might just end up on death row due to overcrowding. Now that’s what I call a big bang for just $20 bucks!

Volunteers also make a huge difference for SMP, so consider sharing some of your time with them. Depending on your skill set, experience, species preference (dogs, cats, rabbits, etc.), what you like to do and how much time you have to spend, they would love to have you on their team!

If you want to schedule a workshop, get more information, volunteer or make a donation, log on to SMP’s Facebook page at facebook.com/sheltermephoto, send an email to info@sheltermephoto.org or call 303-929-5655.
